

Agreement or no Agreement?

The negotiations regarding the Ukraine war have entered a new phase.

After some back and forth, during which even Trump had spoken to Putin, many points of the original peace plan seemed to disappear into thin air or have been adjusted accordingly.

There was news from Russia that Ukraine had attacked Putin's residence, which is why it was not possible to go into the negotiations.

As it has turned out in the meantime, this is sheer mockery, because this attack never happened. So another attempt by Russia to change Trump's mind?

The latter is still under increasing pressure, especially the amateurish publication of the Epstein files, in which Internet users remove blackened bars, has not exactly helped to increase the reputation.

And did we mention Netanyahu's plea for pardon to his own government?

Storms ahead?

Last month, massive protests against Trump were still on the agenda.

This month, also during the contemplative Christmas season, the situation in the USA has calmed down.

There are no more demonstrators to be seen, even if the displeasure over the rising prices is still great.

At the contemplative Christmas time, however, people have withdrawn again to enjoy the festival in peace and quiet.

Many residents are now rather moderate, even if it is of course heard from various camps that "everything is not so bad" after all. After all, Trump would not attack Greenland or Venezuela, according to some arguments.

In this sense, the editorial team can only wish everyone a Merry Christmas, in the hope that the many wars in the world will finally end in 2026.
