Illusion or Breakthrough?

It was a significant point in November: The Democrats won almost all important elections, such as in New York, where Trump's opponent Mamdani was elected as the new mayor – by a considerable margin.

However, this was put into perspective somewhat when Mamdani then put a good face on Trump in the White House.

Moreover, Congress voted by an equally overwhelming majority to release the Epstein Files. Does this put Trump in a predicament?

He is currently countering with his peace plan for Ukraine, which was negotiated by his chief negotiator Witkoff and contains many points that correspond to the Russian position.

This is particularly piquant because a phone call with Witkoff has been leaked, in which he tells the Russians how best to flatter Trump.

However, the Europeans and Ukraine rejected the first draft of the plan because it was written without their consent.

Upcoming Riots?

You can't see them, but they are there: the demonstrations against Trump.

We have already reported a few times that resistance to Trump is forming, that the veterans (led by John Amber) are also organizing against the government to some extent.

And, of course, the many polls that make the dissatisfaction clear.

Now more and more people are forming up and go to the streets – and this at the start of the cold winter season, where demonstrations tend to be suspended because of convenience.

Headwind comes in the form of the MAGA supporters.

Although many of them are wobbling and support for Trump is crumbling, many are still behind the president, such as Charlie Kirk's widow, whom considers Vance to be the designated successor in 2028.

There are said to have been isolated clashes between the two factions, sometimes bloody. However, there have not yet been any major injuries.
